Momentum Grows for State Tax Credit Programs with Key Legislative Wins

The expiration of the expanded federal Child Tax Credit at the end of December 2021 left families struggling to make ends meet. Fortunately, local leaders across the country have come together to cross the aisle and pass pragmatic, bipartisan policies that put more cash in families' pockets to help put food on the table, buy school clothes, and get to work. State-level tax credit programs advancing across the country can both significantly improve people's standard of living and ensure they're weathering rising costs. Many statehouses have also looked to lessons learned around tax credit implementation from the federal level, adding provisions to ensure benefits are accessible for all families – including children of immigrants – and distributed out periodically throughout the year.

The following outlines recent progress to secure Child Tax Credits and Earned Income Tax Credits in states, and outlines the tremendous impact those policies will have on American families.

Tax Credit Nationwide Trends - By the Numbers

- In 2023, 36 states and the District of Columbia took action or considered legislation to expand their state-level tax credits.
 - 18 states passed policies in this past legislative session that improved, expanded, or created a Child Tax Credit (CTC) or Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC).
- $600 more on average were invested in low- and middle-income households per year. This falls short of the $3,600 per-child credit that Congress slashed to $2,000 when they failed to extend the expanded, fully refundable federal Child Tax Credit, but it's a step in the right direction.
- An additional $2 billion will be invested in more than 4 million households across 18 states when people file their taxes in 2024 due to expansions passed in 2023 alone.
- In 2021, 7 states had a permanent state-level Child Tax Credit; now, 14 states do: CA, CO, ID, ME, MD, MA, MN, NJ, NM, NY, OK, OR, UT, VT.
